Reconfiguring Identities:
Tacana Retribalization in Bolivia's Amazonia

by

Laura Ann Bathurst

B.A. (Kansas State University) 1997
M.A. (University of California, Berkeley) 1998

A dissertation submitted in partial satisfaction of the requirements for the degree of

Doctor of Philosophy in Anthropology

in the

GRADUATE DIVISION of the

UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA, BERKELEY

Committee in charge:

Professor Laura Nader
Professor Stanley Brandes
Professor William Taylor

Fall 2005
Reconfiguring Identities: Tacana Retribalization in Bolivia’s Amazonia

Copyright 2005

by

Laura Ann Bathurst
This dissertation is dedicated to the Tacana of Bolivia, so more might know their story.
Table of Contents

Reconfiguring Identities: Tacana Retribalization in Bolivia’s Amazonia

Chapter 1 Introduction: Entering the Field

- Ethnic Identity of the Tacana Diaspora .......................................................... 1
- Research Questions and Motivations ................................................................. 4
- Research Organization and Methods .................................................................. 8
- Indigenous Actors .............................................................................................. 10
- International and Governmental Actors ............................................................ 15
- Theoretical Frames ......................................................................................... 17
- A Roadmap ....................................................................................................... 20

Chapter 2 Visions of Change in the Study of Latin American Indigenas

- A Brief History of Ideas .................................................................................... 23
- Academic Questions ......................................................................................... 24
- The Indian is Dead. Long Live the Indian ......................................................... 26
- Acculturation, Modernization, and Development ............................................. 28
- Indigenism and the Role of the State ................................................................. 34
- Resistance, Revolution, and Strategic Accommodation .................................... 36
- Indigenous Politics .......................................................................................... 40
- Conclusion ....................................................................................................... 42

Chapter 3 Key Moments in the History of the Tacana

- Identity and History ........................................................................................ 44
- Locating the Tacana ......................................................................................... 45
- Scholarly Work about the Tacana .................................................................... 45
- European Conquest and Missionization .......................................................... 46
- Rubber Booms and Busts ............................................................................... 50
- Independent Communities .............................................................................. 54
- Tentative Conclusions .................................................................................... 55

Chapter 4 Introducing Daily Life in Santa Rosa: A Mobile Community

- Mobile Cultures ............................................................................................... 58
- Location and Layout ....................................................................................... 60
- The Politics of Place ....................................................................................... 63
- The State of Paths and Strength of Social Ties ............................................... 66
- A Typical Day .................................................................................................. 68
- Household Composition .................................................................................. 71
- Subsistence Activities ..................................................................................... 72
- Trade .............................................................................................................. 78
List of Figures

Figure 1: Map of Bolivia Showing Tacana Diaspora Down the Beni River and Up the Madre de Dios River

Figure 2: Map from Poster “Desarrollo Con Identidad” (Development With Identity) Showing Distribution of Bolivian Indigenous Groups

Figure 3: Map Showing Tumupasa, San José, and Ixiamas

Figure 4: Map of Bolivia Showing Region of Research

Figure 5: Map Showing Research Site and Surrounding Areas

Figure 6: Household Compounds in Santa Rosa – 2001-2002

Figure 7: Indigenous Organizing in Bolivia: Power Flows Both Ways
List of Organizations and Acronyms

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Acronym</th>
<th>Full Name</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>APCOB</td>
<td>Aid for Indigenous Peasants of Eastern Bolivia</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ADRA</td>
<td>Adventist Relief and Development Agency International</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>CEJIS</td>
<td>Center for Juridical Studies and Social Investigations</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>CIDOB</td>
<td>Confederacy of United and Organized Indigenous Peoples of Bolivia</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>CIPCA</td>
<td>Center for the Investigation and Promotion of the Peasant</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>CIBOAP</td>
<td>Indigenous Center for Original Peoples of the Amazonian Pando</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>CIRABO</td>
<td>Indigenous Center of the Amazonian Region of Bolivia</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>CPIB</td>
<td>Center of Indigenous Peoples of the Beni</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>CPTI-CIDOB</td>
<td>Center of Planning and Management of Indigenos Territory</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>DANIDA</td>
<td>Danish International Development Agency</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>DIFID</td>
<td>United Kingdom Department for International Developent</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>GTZ</td>
<td>German Development Company</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>MACPIO</td>
<td>Ministry of the Affairs of Peasants and Indigenous and Aboriginal Peoples</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>MDSP</td>
<td>Ministry of Sustainable Development and Planning</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>NGO</td>
<td>Non-Govermental Organization</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>OITA</td>
<td>Tacana Indigenous Organization</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>PROMAB</td>
<td>Forest Management Program of Bolivia’s Amazonia</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>PSI</td>
<td>Population Services International</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>SNV</td>
<td>Netherlands Development Organization</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>TCO</td>
<td>Original Communal Territory</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>VAIPO</td>
<td>Vicemistry of Indigenous Affairs and Original Peoples</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>WB</td>
<td>World Bank</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Acknowledgements

A dissertation is not written in a day, nor is it the work of only one author, no matter whose name is on the title page. I have been fortunate to have the support of so many during this long, long journey, and it is impossible to name them all here, or to give those I name the credit they deserve. This task is made even more difficult by the potentially sensitive nature of research that investigates day to day life, with all its highs and lows, moments we’re glad to remember and others wish we could forget, documenting all the mess, good and bad, of being human. Thus, those who participated in my research itself, the community of Santa Rosa, the community of 21 de Septiembre, the many other forest communities who hosted this awkward gringa, and all the others, indigenous and not, throughout Bolivia, who took the time to teach me about their lives, to talk to me about issues I considered important, and to forge the friendships that spring from projects such as this – all these people remain anonymous here, but not unremembered or unacknowledged. Your tolerance, sacrifice, and support have meant so much, and I can only hope that I have done justice in my analysis and representation of the lives you’ve shared with me. Thank you.

Others, not directly implicated in my research, can be named. During my research, in Riberalta, PROMAB loaned me office space, and its director, Rene Boot, was a wonderful de facto advisor when I needed it. Jacaranda, Samaria, and Nicola kept me from being too serious, and Jean Paul took me in when I was ill. Back in California, Rhonda Bathurst and Liza Grandia sorted through my mail and took care of various issues that cropped up in the US while I was abroad. From Kansas, Mom mailed me novels, letters, and long, chatty e-mails with news from back home.
While I was writing my dissertation, Michael Parker was the perfect housemate, personal library, technology consultant, and work inspiration. He kept writing from being a lonely process without keeping me from writing. Al Chang encouraged me in the obsessive pursuit of clarity in thought, organization in the writing process, and reminded me to enjoy life. Michelle Munson always believed in me and could be counted on for good Kansas council. Andrew Swan in Berkeley, and Jacaranda van Rheenen in the Netherlands, were both always ready with supportive and sympathetic ears as we dissertated together. All these, as well as Rachael and Jennie, let me lean on them as needed. In addition, Dorothy Brown helped make the experience as short and painless as possible with her tips and tricks, and Patricia Keller was a wonderful editor at a critical moment.

I was blessed with a wonderful dissertation committee. Laura Nader has been a true mentor from the moment I walked into her office for an undergraduate summer research internship. Her commitment to engaged, ethical, relevant anthropology so evident in her work remains an inspiration. For her understanding of the individual nature of each person’s learning process, for pushing me, for allowing me intellectual freedom, and for sharing her warmth as a person as well as her sharp intellect I offer the most heart-felt thanks. Stanley Brandes and Bill Taylor were also wonderfully supportive. I don’t believe that Bill Taylor knows how much his students appreciate how a visit to his office always provides a calm respite in the middle of the storm of writing, as he reminds us that writing is a creative, as well as intellectual, process. My thanks also go to Alexei Yurchak, Donald Moore, and to the rest of the faculty in the Department of Anthropology who contributed so much to my formation as an anthropologist.
A journey that led me to the remote Amazon forest began in the Kansas Great Plains. At Kansas State University, so many wonderful people helped launch this farm girl into this incredibly fascinating big-wide-world. Harald Prins, Marty Ottenheimer, Harriet Ottenheimer, Bunny McBride, and Nancy Twiss deserve special mention. There are pieces of all of them in these pages.

Finally, I want to thank my mom and dad for their unfailing support, even while they worried. You’re the best!

This research was supported by funding from the National Science Foundation, through a Graduate Research Fellowship, and by the University of California, Berkeley, through a Chancellor’s Opportunity Fellowship, a Tinker Summer Travel Grant from the Center for Latin American Studies, and a Special Grant from the Office of the Dean of the College of Letters and Science.

All of those named above and so many others have contributed to this project. My warmest thanks to you all.