Transformative Leader

CHRISTOPHER CALLAHAN
TO BE PACIFIC'S NEXT PRESIDENT

Chris and Jean Callahan

Welcome

HOMECOMING AND FAMILY WEEKEND 2019

Students, alumni and families had the opportunity to attend a free concert featuring American singer, songwriter, actress, and pianist Kiana Lede and UOP student, rapper and violinist Jelani Brown '20.

MARIA PALLAVICINI Interim President

There are many wonderful things happening at Pacific that you can read more about in this issue. I am particularly pleased to share the launch of our new School of Health Sciences and four inaugural programs (master's degree programs in clinical nutrition, nursing and social work and a doctor of occupational therapy) that will join existing popular programs in athletic training, audiology, physical therapy, physician assistant studies and speech-language pathology. These programs will educate professionals for the growing demand in health care services.

We also have launched Benerd College, which combines the former Gladys L. Benerd School of Education with the former University College to offer innovative academic programs in flexible formats to better serve today's learners. The new Benerd College offers degree programs, continuing education courses, certificate programs and lifelong learning opportunities.

We completed the first phase of our beautiful re-imagined library in time to open it at the start of the semester. When fully completed in winter 2020, the William Knox Holt Memorial Library and Learning Center will be transformed into a high-tech contemporary resource for modern teaching and learning.

And our most exciting news is the announcement of Pacific's new president. Chris Callahan joins us from the Walter Cronkite School of Journalism and Mass Communication at Arizona State University on July 1, 2020. We are thrilled to have someone of his caliber lead us through transformative change with a bright and bold vision for the future.

I look forward to working with our alumni, donors and supporters in continuing to make Pacific an outstanding university.

MARY PIFTANZA '86 BIIS Pacific Alumni Association President

I am honored to serve as the president of the Pacific Alumni Association for 2019-20.

The Pacific Alumni Association welcomed new board members at our first board meeting and our new students at the annual "Scoops on the House" event. Convocation followed, and our board members were honored to hand out pins for the first Purpose Pinning Ceremony. Our "roaring" welcome greeted new students at Tiger Roar.

We welcomed more than 1,300 alumni, family and friends to the Stockton Campus for Homecoming and Family Weekend in October. A few great highlights: the inaugural Pacific Prism concert by conservatory students, faculty and staff, the exciting one-point win by the Men's Water Polo team vs USC, the Community Involvement Program's 50th Anniversary Dinner, and a successful concert sponsored by ASuop.

My objective as president is to advance our vision of enhancing the "communication, involvement and support for University of the Pacific alumni, students, faculty and staff and to enrich the lives of alumni worldwide." Specifically, we will implement technology and outreach to increase alumni participation. To this end, the Tiger-to-Tiger networking app has launched, which enables alumni to reconnect with classmates, sign up to mentor students and expand professional networks. See tigertotiger.pacific.edu.

Our board is preparing additional opportunities for alumni to participate in achieving our shared vision. Stay tuned at pacificalumni.org. It continues to be an exciting year and we want you to be part of it!

DANTE RODRIGUEZ-GOMEZ sits with his girlfriend Kayleigh Moraga as they wait to be called at the Immigration Law Clinic at the McGeor to be called at the Immigration Law Clinic at the McGeorge School of Law on Saturday, October 19, 2019. Rodriguez-Gomez immigrated to the United States with his parents when he was three months old.

Immigration Clinic Makes Impact

Students in the Immigration Law Clinic at McGeorge School of Law have an opportunity to represent low-income immigrant clients from around the world seeking humanitarian asylum, victims of crime visas and more.

"The people we represent are particularly vulnerable individuals, including survivors of domestic and widespread violence," says Professor Blake Nordahl, who oversees the operation. In its 20 years, the immigration clinic has built an excellent reputation for providing a wide range of services, including an annual Immigration Fair that has helped hundreds of people with citizenship and DACA.

"Very few nonprofit organizations in our area provide legal services for immigrants, and at the same time there is a high need for these services," says Nordahl. The clinic is funded by grants and gifts, including some from the state that allowed it to expand services to include unaccompanied children.

The clinic is a one-semester, three-unit course requiring students to spend 120 hours working with clients. "The clinic is one way the students can serve their community and at the same time practice a fascinating area of law that is constantly changing due to its political nature."

Clinic students work as attorneys on their immigration cases. They may provide initial consultations, appear in court when needed, and help their clients prepare important legal documents. Nordahl says, "The clinic gives the students a strong educational experience that allows them to enter the workforce more practice-ready. It also offers a lot of career options for attorneys to have a practice they enjoy and to make a living."

In the past 10 years, more than 20 McGeorge Immigration Law Clinic alumni have gone on to practice immigration law. They include 2011 graduate Katherine Fleming, who is the first Removal Defense Project Director for the FUEL Network, an initiative created by the City of Sacramento to protect its immigrant residents. "Professor Nordahl taught me how to do my best within a system that is rushing to detain immigrants. Working at the clinic helped me leverage my skills in the workforce."

Dugoni student raises the "barre" in organized dentistry

Letitia Edwards '20 recalls a class assignment in second grade where she was asked what she wanted to be when she grew up. "I happened to have a dentist appointment that same week and I remember thinking how nice and happy my dentist seemed. I thought that would be a good profession for me," said Edwards.

And it stuck.

At 23 years old, she is not only one of the youngest students in her dental school class at the Arthur A. Dugoni School, she also sits on the Board of Trustees for the American Student Dental Association (ASDA) and has lobbied Congress on behalf of dental students in California.

Edwards grew up in the Bay Area, cheering on the San Francisco Giants, in a family that valued education and encouraged her to pursue a profession that would lead to a purposeful life.

With her sights set on Dugoni, Edwards attended UC Irvine as an undergraduate pre-dental student. While there, she explored avenues outside of the traditional laboratory setting. "I wanted to work with people instead of pipettes," she said. She interned at the Pediatric Exercise and Genomics Center that is dedicated to improving health outcomes for children with cerebral palsy, autism and ADHD through exercise. Edwards is a classically trained ballet dancer, so when the opportunity arose to study the benefits of ballet in children with cerebral palsy, she jumped at it. "It ended up being one of my favorite experiences. I found myself," said Edwards. "It got me thinking that I might want to work with children with special needs in the future," and her goal of becoming a pediatric dentist and an advocate for patients from vulnerable populations was solidified.

As a Trustee for the ASDA, Edwards, along with 1,000 other dental professionals, met with members of Congress last spring to discuss many issues including student loan debt, health insurance reform and support for the Ensuring Lasting Smiles Act that guarantees children suffering from congenital anomalies and birth defects receive the treatment they need. "Right now about 200 congressmen are supporting this legislation," said Edwards. "We had some incredibly productive conversations and I feel so fortunate that I got to be there."

Now in her final year of dental school, Edwards dreams of integrating a desensitization area in her future practice to relieve the anxiety and overstimulation that patients with special needs often experience when visiting the dentist. She also hopes to join the faculty of a dental school so she can pay forward what she has learned and continue to be engaged in organized dentistry. "At Dugoni, I have discovered that my purpose is to lead others to a healthier lifestyle through understanding and compassion."

REACH FOR THE STARS

Pacific's Reach for the Stars STEM Academy, founded on the Stockton Campus in 2011 with alumnus and former NASA astronaut José Hernández '84, was expanded to the Sacramento Campus this summer with 36 seventhgraders from the Oak Park neighborhood. The students received handson lessons in science. technology, engineering and math, took field trips to see STEM in action, and built several projects including a solar-powered fan (left). The students will be invited back for summer 2020, along with a new group of seventh-graders.

Alumni Events

Alumni Board Sets Priorities for 2019–20

University of the Pacific Alumni Association President Mary Pietanza '86 BUS and the Board of Directors are working on three priorities for the 2019-20 academic year:

- Strengthen alumni engagement and recognition;
- Maximize alumni opportunities for strategic inclusion in university activities; and
- Support the university and its students by encouraging philanthropy (time, talent, and resources).

Seven board committees -Admission, Awards, Tiger Connection, Clubs, Philanthropy, Governance, and Selection will address these top priorities, Pietanza says. "We want to continue to engage alumni to participate in activities with other alumni, with students, and at the university," she says. "We want you to come back; you're a Tiger for life. We're working on ways to make that happen."

The board is using traditional outreach and social media, including the new Tiger-to-Tiger networking app, to improve communication to involve, support, mentor, and engage alumni, students, faculty and staff to enrich the lives of alumni worldwide.

Its philanthropic efforts include volunteering on campus, hiring Pacific student interns, participating in campus recruitment efforts and traditional giving, Pietanza says.

"In my 10 years of involvement on the board, I've found that people have such a strong love of the university," she notes. "I didn't used to get to campus very often, but now I can't imagine not going back multiple times a year because of the feelings I have about the university and the people you meet."

January 25 Dinner Recognizes 2020 Distinguished Alumni Award Honorees

The Distinguished Alumni Awards, which recognize alumni whose outstanding achievements and services to humanity have brought credit to University of the Pacific, will take place at a January 25, 2020 dinner at the DeRosa University Center Ballroom. Honorees include:

Distinguished Professional Service: Scott Liggett '71 MUS, founder and executive producer of the Shatner Universe LLC, an Emmy Award-winning music and audio producer who has had a successful 40-plus year career as a musician, composer, arranger and executive.

Pacific Alumni Association President's Award:

Dean Butler '79 COP, senior producer of "Feherty" on the Golf Channel, whose professional experience includes more than three decades as an actor on stage and screen, most notably for his five-year turn in the NBC classic, "Little House on the Prairie."

Distinguished Public Service: Arthur R. Coleman, Jr. '81 MUS, instrumental music teacher and department chair at Cesar Chavez High School in Stockton, who was

former CEO and chairman of Nathan Associates, a consultant, economist, expert witness, and founder of the Nathan Scholars program at Pacific. He has funded the Nathan Scholars program, providing internships for students in Washington, DC.

Honorary Alumni Award: Phil Gilbertson, provost emeritus and author of "Pacific Rising." Hired as the university's first provost in 1996, Gilbertson oversaw educational and research programs, library services, information technology, enrollment, financial aid and continuing education until his retirement in 2010.

Nominations for the 2021 Distinguished Alumni Awards are welcome and may be submitted at pacificalumni.org/awards.

Alumni Association Ventures into Vines

Guests at this year's Taste of Pacific, our signature Homecoming event where vintners showcase their wines for tasting, were treated to a special 2016 vintage Old Vine Zinfandel.

Not only was the wine produced by Klinker Brick Winery in Lodi, which boasts six generations of wine growers, including three Pacific alumni, but the vintage is the first to be selected for 1851 Tiger Vines, the Alumni Association's new University of the Pacific Wine Program.

> "It seemed a natural fit for us to move into the private label wine business following our long experience with Taste of Pacific," explains Polly Crabtree, director of Alumni Relations. "We select the wine, create the name and label for our program, handle the marketing aspects, and Vinoshipper and the winery do the rest."

Nicolas Felten '51, from the family's fourth generation, and Farrah Felten Jolley '09 and Stefan Jolley '09, from the sixth generation, have been great supporters of University of the Pacific. They were honored to have their wine chosen as the program's first selection.

"The Old Vine Zin is an amazing bottle of wine, and we look forward to growing a new experience for alumni as wine drinkers in the Association get involved in this program," noted Farah.

Association leaders are excited to kick off the newest program, which is $23 per bottle and may only be purchased at 1851TigerVines.com. Proceeds will go to the Pacific Alumni Association to support alumni programming, Crabtree says.

"The wine is purchased in three-bottle sets and the total cost with shipping averages under $95 per shipment," she notes. "Bottling took place in early November and the wine started shipping before Thanksgiving 2019.

"This is a very limited run (just 56 cases – 672 bottles), and this wine will not be available again, so we encourage Pacific friends, family, and alumni to order soon. We hope to work with other alumni-owned or operated wineries to introduce more wines to the 1851 Tiger Vines collection."

Klinker Brick Winery already is a favorite of Pacific alumni, says Farrah, and the family is enthused about attracting more alumni customers. "Alumni love to support alumni, and when alumni wineries are involved it's a win-win, as they are supporting local businesses as well," she says.

For more information on the program, visit the website 1851TigerVines.com or call the Alumni Association at 209.946.2391 or toll-free at 866.575.7229.

Faculty Mentors Honored

The Pacific Alumni Association recognized four outstanding faculty members with 2019 Faculty Mentor Awards.

TERESA BERGMAN Professor and Chair, Communication Department

Teresa Bergman's love of learning, enjoyment in making documentary films and affinity for academic research led her to become a professor. "It was a combination of just really loving my research, liking to share it with students, and working with colleagues," Bergman says. "Once I found Communication, it seemed to be the right discipline, where I could combine all of my interests and degrees."

Bergman says Pacific values teaching and research, has serious students, and offers small class sizes. "I get a tremendous amount of satisfaction from mentoring and teaching; I get to know some students really well, and it keeps my research and interests up to date," she says. "It's a way to connect with students and it's what makes teaching truly rewarding."

BILL HERRIN Director, School of International Studies; Professor of Economics

Economics Professor Bill Herrin continues to learn and convey his knowledge to students. "I enjoy pushing students and seeing the lights go on when they learn something new," Herrin says.

"Mentoring means helping students overcome problems, helping them learn how to manage their time better, giving them hints on how to do better in class," he says.

Herrin recalls one former student who ended up earning a PhD in economics and now is a tenured professor at Purdue University. "He had no idea he could even do this stuff," he recalls. "I talked to him after he graduated and we kept in touch, and he's doing well."

RALPH L. SAROYAN '64 Emeritus Professor of Pharmacy

Emeritus Professor Ralph L. Saroyan '64 jumped at the opportunity to become a professor at his alma mater in 1970 and to create the Experiential Learning Program in Pharmacy.

"It seemed like a great opportunity to give back to Pacific Pharmacy and to mentor future pharmacists," Saroyan recalls. "I saw this as an opportunity to change the profession."

He sees mentoring as caring, advising and empowering others to be the best version of themselves. "I always tell mentees to follow their passions and never give up," he says.

"Mentoring requires the development of a genuine relationship between the mentor and mentee to work. Everyone needs someone in their life to guide and encourage them."

CYNTHIA WAGNER WEICK Emeritus Professor of Management; Founding Director, Powell Scholars

Cynthia Wagner Weick was the Professor of Management in the Eberhardt School of Business and held joint appointments in the School of Engineering and Computer Science. She is also the Founding Director of the Powell Scholars Program. Weick served as Interim Dean of Pacific's School of International Studies from May 2010 through May 2012, and was awarded the University's Distinguished Faculty Award in 2005, as well as the Neven C. Hulsey Chair in Business Excellence in 2006.

She became a professor because she wanted to follow her curiosity and spend time investigating topics that interested her. "Mentoring means helping others to elevate their expectations of themselves and to internalize these expectations, so they last a lifetime," she says. "I think mentoring also means helping others embrace changes in what they want out of life. Over time if you can integrate everything you've learned from the past into your future, you'll truly be a unique individual."

In 1949, the University of Pacific football team was undefeated and ranked 10th in the nation. During the 1950s, few major college programs could claim as many alumni players in the NFL. More than 106 Tiger alumni have gone on to play in the NFL.

The storied history of University of the Pacific's 101-year football program will be celebrated at a two-day reunion on May 1–2, 2020. Players, coaches, administrative and support staff members, cheer squad members and Tiger fans are all invited to attend the events, culminating with the Pacific Athletics Hall of Fame dinner on May 2.

Pacific was known as the cradle of coaches, as it produced many prominent names in high school, college and professional sports, including Super Bowl-winning coaches Tom Flores '58; Pete Carroll '73, '78; and Jon Gruden; as well as NFL coaches like Hue Jackson '87, Mike Martz and Buddy Ryan. Coach Amos Alonzo Stagg is regarded nationwide as "the Grand Old Man of Football" and known for his ethics, sportsmanship, innovation and commitment. He coached at Pacific from 1933–46 and was instrumental in establishing the NCAA and the US Olympic organizations.

The impressive list of Tigers to go to the Super Bowl as assistant coaches includes: Tom Flores '58, Bruce Coslet '68, Greg Robinson '75, Jimmy Colletto '77, Ron Turner '77, Dante Scarnecchia, Brad Seely, Ed Donatell, Mike Haluchak, Ron Lynn, John Ramsdell, Wade Harman and Jim Skipper.

Pacific has sent a number of Tiger alumni to play in the Super Bowl including Bob Lee '57, Tom Flores '58, Wayne Hawkins '60, Bob Heinz '69, Honor Jackson '72, Brian Peets '78 and Lionel Manuel '85.

Tom Flores '58 is one of only two people in history to win a Super Bowl as a player (Chiefs), assistant coach (Raiders), and head coach (Raiders). Flores was also the first Hispanic starting quarterback and the first minority head coach in professional football history to win a Super Bowl.

Many Pacific football alumni went onto have distinguished careers off the field, including the

The 1985 Pacific Tigers football team, including head coach Bob Cope and wide receiver Gene Thomas, who would go on to play for the New England Patriots.

"Right here on this campus is where it started." -Pete Carroll '73, '78, head coach of the Seattle Seahawks Honorable Morrison England Jr. '77, '83, a federal judge; actor and politician Alan Autry '75; NFL team general manager Eddie LeBaron '50; Steve Goulart '80, EVP and CIO of MetLife, Inc; and Robert Eberhardt '51, former chair of Pacific's Board of Regents and president of the Bank of Stockton.

Reunion festivities will begin on May 1 with "Beer & Brats," followed the next morning by brunch and discussion on the evolution of college football and its history at Pacific. A collection of artifacts and photographs from Amos Alonzo Stagg and the Stagg Memorial Stadium will be on display in the William Knox Holt Memorial Library and Learning Center throughout the weekend.

The Hall of Fame dinner on Saturday evening, May 2, at the Janssen-Lagorio Gymnasium, will feature video tributes to each inductee and culminate with the awarding of the Amos Alonzo Stagg Award of Honor, presented to Pacific letter winners in recognition of leading lives of distinction and demonstrating Stagg's integrity, dedication, idealism and team spirit.

The 2020 Hall of Fame inductees are the 1972 and 1973 football teams, coached by the late Chester Caddas; and football players Daryl Hobbs '91 and Greg Koperek '90. The 2020 Amos Alonzo Stagg Award winners are former NFL players Carl Kammerer '61 and Tafa Jefferson '97.

"Pacific's football program has a significant place in U.S. collegiate football history," said reunion committee member and former associate athletics director, Cindy (Bava) Spiro '76, '84. "The last allteam football reunion was held in 2002." Smaller annual reunions take place that are specifically for members of certain teams, including those involving Moose Myer's Men, the men who played for Coach Jack "Moose" Myers.

Additional reunion committee members include: Duane Isetti '63, '66; Dick McClure '78; Mike Siegfried '69; Brian Peets '78; Mike House '80; and Greg Bishop '95.

"Pacific football has a unique bond among Tigers," said Spiro, who is married to former player, Steve 'Spike' Spiro '74. "We hope that everyone will attend and rekindle special friendships."

The power of giving

Two years ago we publicly launched Leading with Purpose: The Campaign for University of the Pacific, the largest fundraising endeavor in Pacific's history. Funds raised from this campaign will impact thousands of students, like Robert, for generations to come.

Playing In Carnegie Hall

It can be described as a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity, and indeed it was for students in Pacific's Symphonic Wind Ensemble who performed at Carnegie Hall in the New York Wind Band Festival. The trip was made possible in part by donor-funded gifts, including the Michael James Rooke Hall Endowed Fund for Music, to support enrichment opportunities and experiential learning activities. Experiential learning is a campaign priority, and opportunities like this boost Pacific graduates' preparedness to lead lives of purpose.

Our performance at Carnegie Hall was lifechanging. Performing at such an amazing and well-known venue like Carnegie Hall inspires me and gives me the confidence to dream bigger now! My favorite moment was looking up in the middle of our performance of "Blue Shades" and seeing the dean's determined face while we all played our hearts out on stage.

THE NEW AGE OF ACING New Health School and Programs Focus on Meeting High Demand Needs

Retiring baby boomers have increased health care needs, resulting in a need for more health care professionals.

MARIA PALLAVINCINI

Interim President

University of the Pacific is leveraging its reputation for preparing health care professionals to create four new programs that will serve as the catalyst for a new health school to meet the demands of a growing health care industry.

New accelerated master's degree programs in clinical nutrition, nursing and social work will begin in fall 2020, and a doctorate in occupational therapy will begin in spring 2021. These will join existing popular programs in athletic training, audiology, physical therapy, physician assistant studies and speech-language pathology to form Pacific's new School of Health Sciences. The dental and pharmacy programs will remain in their respective schools.

The School of Health Sciences will be housed on the Sacramento campus and programs will be offered in flexible formats on all three campuses (Sacramento, San Francisco and Stockton).

"Retiring baby boomers have increased health care needs, resulting in a need for more health care professionals," said Maria Pallavicini, Pacific's interim president. "These new programs include hybrid and online learning and were developed after extensive conversations with our community partners and others in health care."

Health care jobs are expected to grow by 14% from 2018 to 2028, according to the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics, outpacing all other employment sectors.

Programs will feature interprofessional education where students in the School of Health Sciences, the Thomas J. Long School of Pharmacy, and the Arthur A. Dugoni School of Dentistry will learn alongside each other. This collaborative approach will prepare students for clinical settings where integrated teams provide patient care.

"Students from our various health care programs will take classes and have clinical experiences together so that they can develop the ethos of interprofessional medicine as it is practiced today," said Michael Hunter Schwartz, Pacific's interim provost. "We're preparing our students to be collaborative health care leaders who will support lifelong wellness in our communities."

A HISTORY OF HEALTH CARE LEADERSHIP

Pacific has trained health care professionals since 1858 when the university formed the first medical school in California, now the Stanford University School of Medicine. The university's portfolio of health care programs includes the Arthur A. Dugoni School of Dentistry, which was founded in 1896 as the College of Physicians and Surgeons. The Department of Speech-Language Pathology dates back to 1936. Music therapy was introduced in 1938 and will remain in the Conservatory of Music. The Thomas J. Long School of Pharmacy opened in 1955, the Department of Physical Therapy was established in 1985 and the Department of Audiology was launched in 2015.

Learn more about the School of Health Sciences at Pacific.edu/HealthSciences.

NEW SCHOOL OF HEALTH PROGRAMS at a glance

DOCTOR OF OCCUPATIONAL THERAPY

An accelerated program that will prepare students to help people of all ages live their best lives by working through injury, disability and illness. Instruction will be delivered in a hybrid format, offering online learning, classroom instruction and simulation labs. The 120-unit program can be completed in eight trimesters, or 32 months.

MASTER OF SOCIAL WORK

An accelerated program that will prepare students to focus in health care areas such as mental health and aging. This hybrid program will be open to students with or without social work academic degrees or job experience. Students with undergraduate social work degrees can graduate in as few as 12 months, or three trimesters.

MASTER OF SCIENCE IN NURSING

An accelerated program designed for licensed nurses who have a bachelor's degree in nursing and are seeking a master's degree while continuing to work. Specialties are offered in rehabilitation nursing, diabetes management or a self-designed concentration.

MASTER OF SCIENCE IN CLINICAL NUTRITION

An accelerated program that will lead to eligibility for the Registered Dietician Nutrition exam, and will leverage existing community relationships and partnerships in health care. The Master of Science in Clinical Nutrition was developed to comply with the rigorous accreditation associated with the Future Education Model of nutrition education.

Pacific's CO-OP Going Strong at 50 Years

A half-century of hands-on experience

Fifty years ago, University of the Pacific professor Helm Haas and Dean Robert Heyborne had a vision to enhance the experience for School of Engineering and Computer Science students.

The Cooperative Education Program they proposed would allow engineering students to gain first-hand work experience. And while it has, CO-OP has grown to be much more.

"CO-OP is the most valuable thing about our program and what really sets us apart," said Dean Steven Howell.

Pacific is the only university on the West Coast where a CO-OP is required and built into the curriculum for engineering majors. For six to seven months, students work for organizations in the state, country and even across the world, while earning an average salary of $3,700 a month. Students practice and grow their engineering and computer science skills while enhancing the soft skills needed to thrive in their future careers.

In 1969, the Engineering Academic Council and the University Academic Affairs Committee approved CO-OP. Heyborne and Haas, who served as the first full-time CO-OP coordinator, quickly set off to meet with potential employers, community colleges and high schools to spread the news. The effects were immediate — the school saw an 83% jump in enrollment by fall 1970.

Engineering students today total about 650. All of them are required to do the CO-OP, with the exception of the computer science majors, but about 85 percent of them complete the program as well.

CO-OP Director Irene Camy said people who graduated 10 to 20 years ago still credit their experience as being pivotal in their careers. She routinely receives phone calls from alumni who share that their company has a position available for a CO-OP student and they want to offer the same experience they had to another Pacific student. "It has built 50 years of alumni who give back."

Students also are required to enroll in a preparation class that teaches them to write resumes, cover letters and update their LinkedIn profiles. Camy walks the students "I returned from my CO-OP with a bigger purpose and mission to finish my degree," said Anselmo, whose twin sister also completed a CO-OP.

The CO-OP program was one of the reasons Anselmo chose Pacific. She said she knows her experience in the program and studying abroad will be the highlights of her college career.

CO-OP helped Danilo Baledio '21, who is pursuing a blended master's degree in computer science, grow more confident about his abilities and purpose. Enrolling in Pacific and doing CO-OP has changed his life, he said.

"Having the CO-OP experience and a second internship makes me a much more valuable candidate in the workforce. Although finding a job will be difficult and competitive, this gives me a leg up," he said. "CO-OP is something that sets Pacific apart, and I'm glad it was founded."

through mock interviews and even helps by serving as a sounding board for the students.

In August, mechanical engineering major Blanca Anselmo '20 completed her CO-OP with Vizion Utility Partners in Pleasanton. The company has since hired her as a parttime remote employee while she continues her education.

The new entropy of the service of th

Merger focuses on innovation in education

This fall, Pacific officially introduced Benerd College, a school focused on providing modern educational programs in flexible formats to meet the diverse needs of today's students, including working adults returning to college to complete a degree, pursue graduate study, or further their professional or personal educational goals.

The new Benerd College merges the highly-regarded programs of the Gladys L. Benerd School of Education and University College, Pacific's home for professional and continuing education, into a new unit designed to take advantage of synergies and encourage innovation in program development and provision. Benerd College

"Benerd College will build upon Pacific's reputation for excellence in education and take advantage of creative collaborations to design exciting and novel programs," said Maria Pallavicini, Pacific's interim president. "The two units will leverage their strengths to provide a wide variety of indemand courses, certificates and degree programs to meet the continuing education needs of undergraduates, educators, professionals and adult learners."

Benerd College will offer degree programs, a wide variety of continuing education courses, teaching credentialing and service credentialing, certificate programs and lifelong learning opportunities.

"Today's students expect flexibility in course delivery and continuous innovation so the courses fit in their busy lives, while also finding flexibility in costs," said Patricia Campbell, dean of the new college.

Benerd College students will have access to the B-Hive, an academic, credentialing and career advising unit designed for those who can't always seek support during traditional business hours because they work or have other commitments. The B-Hive will stay open later for Benerd students.

The college also will continue to be Pacific's center for online and hybrid course development and in-house instructional designers to help faculty develop and implement online courses to better serve undergraduate and graduate students.

Benerd College is now offering a Doctor of Education, Transformative Action in Education degree that uses a hybrid approach of interactive, online classes and face-to-face meetings. Benerd's doctoral degree options are tailored to practitioners in school districts, colleges, universities, government agencies, nonprofits, healthcare and corporate contexts in the realms of learning, leadership and change.

For people interested in growing their careers, professional development and continuing education courses are available online and in-person on a variety of topics including technology, business, health and writing. Benerd offers more than two dozen certificate programs to equip people with new skills. Another ongoing offering is the Osher Lifelong Learning Institute, better known as OLLI, designed for people ages 50+ and open to all adult learners. OLLI provides intellectually stimulating non-credit classes, interest groups, trips and special events.

While Benerd College is new, it has the benefit of name recognition because of the long-standing reputation for excellence in education. Benerd College also has degree completion programs and in Fall 2020 will be adding a Criminal Justice concentration to it popular Organizational Leadership degree completion program and a for-credit post-baccalaureate credential in Clinical Laboratory Science. These offerings reflect the College's aim to provide degrees in a variety of fields that ultimately help people reach their professional and personal goals.

MARIA PALLAVICINI Interim President

A warm and engaging personality. An energetic spirit. An insightful listener. A quick learner. This was how students, faculty, staff, and alumni described Christopher Callahan on the day it was announced he would be Pacific's next president.

Callahan, the current and founding dean of the Walter Cronkite School of Journalism and Mass Communication at Arizona State University, led the school to its stature as one of the nation's top programs. Still, he was noticeably humbled when Board of Regents Chair Kevin Huber introduced him to the Pacific community.

"I am honored to join the talented students and dedicated faculty," Callahan said. "Pacific is an outstanding national university with an extraordinarily rich history spanning 168 years - and an even greater future. Our university has many advantages: inspiring professors who are laser-focused on student success, an engaged and diverse student body, talented regents, dedicated administrators and staff, loyal alumni and an enviable mix of outstanding professional schools with a distinguished liberal arts college at its core."

His path to the Pacific presidency was not traditional. The son of a New York City police officer and homemaker, Callahan was the first in his family to graduate college. "My dad always worked two and three jobs while my mother took care of my sister and me. Knowing what my parents had to do to help us be successful is foundational to who I am and where I am today."

Callahan pursued his passion for journalism at Boston University where he received his bachelor's degree. He later served as a reporter and editor at The Associated Press, eventually becoming a Washington correspondent, covering Congress, the Pentagon and Supreme Court. He went on to obtain a master's in public administration from Harvard University's John F. Kennedy School of Government.

The opportunity to be a lecturer while a graduate student sparked his interest in academia. After graduation, he joined the University of Maryland to help start a new experiential learning program in the state capital of Annapolis and the next year in Washington, D.C.

"I found the best of both worlds in teaching and journalism. Working with the students and watching them learn a profession I was passionate about made me realize I could give to them the same opportunities I had been given."

In 1993, Callahan became assistant dean of the Philip Merrill College of Journalism at the University of Maryland, and five years later moved up to become the no. 2 administrator in the college as the associate dean. His success in growing the college into one of the best journalism schools in the country led to what would become one of the most pivotal moments of his career—a call from Walter Cronkite.

"I remember the day. I had a message on my answering machine from someone saying he was Walter Cronkite, and I thought, this is just one of my friends playing a trick on me, so I erased it. To this day, I wish I had that recording."

Cronkite had been working closely with Arizona State University after the school was named in his honor. In 2005, he was advising the university's leadership and was instrumental in tapping Callahan to lead the Walter Cronkite School of Journalism and Mass Communication as the program's founding dean. Over the next 14 years, Callahan transformed the once struggling program into one of the nation's best and most innovative schools of journalism.

He spearheaded the creation of a more than a dozen professional, experience-based learning programs for students, including Cronkite News, a multiplatform operation that features a nightly student-produced newscast

He also created professional programs including the New Media Innovation and Entrepreneurship Lab, the Cronkite Public Relations Lab and Cronkite Noticias, a Spanish-language multiplatform news outlet.

"When you love what you do, and have a passion for creating engaging and impactful programs and learning experiences for students, the rest falls into place. I wanted students to have immersive, hands-on experience, so we used the model of a 'teaching hospital' to create news laboratories where students could take what they learned in their classrooms and apply it under the guidance of great faculty."

When students and faculty members returned this fall, stunning changes to the William Knox Holt Memorial Library and Learning Center awaited them.

First-phase renovations have transformed the 90,000-square-foot library into a hightech, high-touch center that reflects how students live and learn today.

"Our old library was based on the assumption that its purpose was to store books and journals," University Librarian Mary Somerville explains. "As we've moved from print publications to digital publications, we're now able to provide access to scholarly knowledge from electronic resources which students and faculty prefer because they can access them anytime, any place."

The new library design makes studying visible, with areas for individuals and groups, and a gathering place for exchanging ideas. Vibrant plush swivel chairs and single pods offer comfort and privacy, and a full-service

Starbucks café soon will serve as a place to come and collaborate. The renovation project was made possible by generous gifts from alumni, foundations and friends of the university.

Students, faculty and staff members directly contributed and continue to influence the newly imagined library, most recently through TELL US, an initiative to capture and record feedback and recommendations. Visitors are able to provide input through two suggestion boxes on the first and second floors, a web form, by email (library@pacific.edu), or in-person.

Beginning in January 2016, Somerville says, students, faculty, staff, library representatives and campus planners together developed overarching goals for the facility, which were reviewed by members of the Academic Council Library Committee, the schools and college on the Stockton Campus, alumni and the Associated Students organization

"Consensus was a shared vision moving forward," Somerville says, with participatory design continuing throughout the development process. The various groups also met to review furniture design and other specific features.

Upon entering, visitors are welcomed into the Vertical Village, featuring a large atrium basking in natural light, where they can see both the first and second floors. Two help desks – one dedicated to technology and the other for general information – are located next to a digital kiosk that invites visitors to use a touch screen to explore the library's new layout. On the second floor is the Center for Teaching and Learning, where curriculum is created, adjacent to the Student-Academic Support Hub.

Library Wows

Students take advantage of the new seating and study facilities at the William Knox Holt Memorial Library and Learning Center

Also on the first floor is The Cube – a large, eye-catching experimentation space with floor-to-ceiling glass walls - offering students the opportunity to create content using virtual reality, augmented reality, drone research technology, and 3D printing, in addition to the Media X digital gallery and editing rooms. A 100-inch touch screen offers pop-up lectures, presentations, and exhibitions.

One example of how The Cube technology is used, Somerville says, is the way biology and chemistry students use virtual reality to experience the human heart from the perspective of actually sitting or standing inside it. "Technology transforms the student experience," she notes.

On the second floor is The Hub, where Student Academic Support Services - including research librarians, tutoring, writing, and a study hall - ensures academic success, Somerville says. The addition of a multi-faith meditation and prayer area is part of the second floor phase of construction that will open in January 2020.

Traditionally a library was a repository where the academic community could access information and then interpret it, she notes. But in the new library, "with open access to information, academics can expand the boundaries of knowledge and interpret it in a variety of formats, including multimedia presentations, virtual and augmented reality, which can then be disseminated globally," she adds.

The final phase of improvements to the library is scheduled to begin in May 2020 with renovations to the library plaza to streamline traffic patterns into the north entrances. The water feature will be redesigned and relocated, Somerville says. The new plaza, located next door to the Conservatory of Music, will be used for events that bring the campus and community together.

him dramatically increase student enrollment, retention, diversity, graduation rates and recruitment of out-of-state students. He has more than tripled the size of the faculty, led the creation of new degree programs on the undergraduate, master's and PhD levels, forged learning and research partnerships with major corporations and nonprofits nationally, and raised more than $100 million.

His success led to being named vice provost for Arizona State's downtown Phoenix campus in 2011, which now has nearly 13,000 students across seven colleges. In 2014, he became CEO of Arizona PBS, one of the nation's largest public television stations with a focus on public service and lifelong learning.

Nearly 15 years after leading the Cronkite School into a new era, Callahan was ready to take on a larger role. Pacific was the right fit.

"Pacific is truly a student-centered institution-students are first and foremost. Every university says that, but many fall short. Pacific is designed around the success of students. The focus on students is in the DNA of Pacific," Callahan said.

"Pacific has incredible assets in place: the state's oldest university, and a strong mix of liberal arts education surrounded by outstanding professional schools. It has three fantastic and differentiated campuses. And Pacific provides students the best attributes of a national comprehensive university combined with the close-knit, intimate learning environment of a small liberal arts college. It is truly the best of both worlds."

Callahan was the unanimous choice of Pacific's Board of Regents.

"Chris brings an energy and experience that match Pacific's needs perfectly," said Board of Regents Chair Kevin Huber. "He has an impressive record developing programs that are relevant to students, and he will bring great ideas for unifying our distinctive three-campus university in new ways to fully leverage Pacific's undergraduate experiences and unparalleled professional schools and graduate programs."

Added Norman Allen, vice chair of the Board of Regents and chair of the Presidential Search Advisory Committee, "Chris has an exciting balance of academic experience and entrepreneurial skill. He also understands how to engage with our entire community in a personable, relatable and productive way. Chris is exactly what Pacific needs right now."

Callahan believes the most compelling characteristics of Pacific are its mission and its values, which are aligned with what is needed in higher education today. "Higher education is at an inflection point. The value of a college degree has never been more important and remains the key determinant of economic success. But it also creates a full person who is not just successful financially, but in their communities where they can be contributing and active participants in society and our democracy.

"The most important thing we can do as educators is create lifelong learners in a digital world where people constantly need to retool. Pacific fits in perfectly. It offers deep learning and applying that learning in real-world settings, which increases learning for the student and helps the community. There is no better combination."

Callahan will become Pacific's 26th president on July 1, 2020.
